

TWO TIMER

Industrial Facility/Sam Hecht

Many cities, with London as no exception, continue to experience the mass movement of people. The Two Timer clock acknowledges this modern condition with two clocks sharing the same dial. It comprises of two quartz movements, with a carefully devised dial. Designed in two sizes, it will sit happily in the home, the office, the hospital, the hotel, the airline lounge, or the foyer of a financial building. It illustrates that, even with different time zones, we are of one-world. "It's as if everyone these days has come from or is going to, somewhere else... Two-Timer is a useful expression of this modern condition, merging two different time zones into one clock." Sam Hecht.

Biography

Industrial Facility is a design office formed by designer Sam Hecht and architect Kim Colin in 2002. The studio follows a rigorous path of investigation and analysis in its work. Its belief is in the importance of design as a means of simplifying our lives in an inspirational way. Sam Hecht is probably best known for his contribution to the development of technically demanding projects for Muji, for which he has produced over 50 products and where he is currently Design Advisor for Europe. Other recent collaborations include the Twice clock and Once watch for Lexon France, the FlexLamp for Droog and the Equipment project for Whirlpool (2004). For Epson Japan he has produced a DVD/LCD projector (2004) and the third generation Picturemate printer (2006), both of which have been awarded a G-mark from Japan, and an IF Gold Award from Germany.

In total, Hecht and Industrial Facility have earned themselves over 30 design awards in the past few years. Hecht has been honoured with a Royal Designer for Industry (RDI) award. As of 2011 Sam is a Professor at Karlsruhe, in Germany.
